USER PERSONA

Alex Chen

“I just want to know if the sushi is actually there before I drive over.”

QUICK FACTS

Age	28
Role	UX designer at a Victoria SaaS startup
Lives	Fernwood, Victoria BC
Commute	Bikes / transit, occasional car-share
Tech	iPhone, Apple Watch, heavy IG user
Eats	Sushi 2×/wk, oat lattes, lazy dinners
Budget	Comfortable mid-range, hates waste

BIO

Alex moved from Vancouver two years ago for a quieter life and better sushi. She works hybrid, so most lunches are 'grab something from the nearest fresh-food counter' — except the counter is usually picked over by the time she gets there. She's annoyed by food waste, charmed by small local businesses, and will absolutely trade a 2-second tap for knowing the avocado maki is still in stock.

GOALS

- Eat well without planning ahead.
- Stop wasted trips to picked-over shelves.
- Support small Victoria food spots she loves.
- Feel a little smug about a smooth lunch run.

PAIN POINTS

- ✕ Drives across town and the case is empty.
- ✕ Store phone numbers go to voicemail.
- ✕ Google Maps photos are weeks old.
- ✕ Hates feeling rude asking staff to 'check'.

BEHAVIOURS

- → Checks Instagram stories before going to a café.
- → Will detour for a free coffee reward.
- → Posts food photos 3-4× / week.
- → Trusts crowdsourced reviews over branded ones.

A DAY WITH SHELFIE

11:47 AM — Alex finishes a meeting, opens Shelfie, taps 'sushi'. Fujiya shows Deluxe Tray · IN, updated 2 minutes ago by another user. She reserves one for 12:00, walks 8 minutes, scans the QR, and is back at her desk before the meeting recap is even sent. On her way out she taps 'LOW' on the remaining trays — +15 points toward her next oat latte.